CHAPTERS 2011 AUTHORS

RILLA ASKEW grew up in the little city of Bartlesville at the edge of the tallgrass prairie. Most of her fiction is set in Oklahoma, but she doesn't consider herself a regional writer. America is her subject; Oklahoma the canvas. Her books include "Harpsong," "Fire in Beulah," "The Mercy Seat" and "Strange Business." "Harpsong" received the Oklahoma Book Award for Fiction, the Western Heritage Award for Best Novel from the National Cowboy and Western Heritage Museum, Book of the Year for Historical Fiction from Foreword Magazine, the WILLA Award for Historical Fiction from Women Writing the West and the Violet Crown Award for Fiction from the Writers' League of Texas.

SHELDON RUSSELL, a former Oklahoma public school English teacher, retired as a professor emeritus from the University of Central Oklahoma in 2000. Russell published his first novel, "Empire," in 1993. He followed that suspense novel with two historic frontier titles — "The Savage Trail" and "Requiem at Dawn," which was a finalist for Best Original Paperback in the Western Writers of America's 2001 Spur Awards competition.

EMILY YELLIN, a longtime contributor to The New York Times, is the author of "Your Call Is (Not That) Important to Us" and "Our Mothers' War." She also has written for Time, The Washington Post, The International Herald Tribune, Newsweek, Smithsonian Magazine and other publications. Born in White Plains, N.Y., Yellin grew up in Memphis. She graduated from the University of Wisconsin-Madison with a degree in English literature and received a master's degree in journalism from Northwestern University. She has lived in New York City, Chicago, Los Angeles and London, but currently lives in Memphis.
