Celebrate the GENERATIONS in your family. Kids, tell the adults in your life (grandparents, parents, aunts and uncles, older cousins and more) what's important to you. Adults, tell the kids in your life what you think they should know. Use this simple guide to share your stories – in writing; on video; by phone, Zoom or drawing – and learn more about each other!
Questions for Kids … to Share With Adults

Let the adults in your life learn more about YOU! Answer these questions and share in writing, in a video, with artwork or in person.

1. What do you like about being a kid today? What are the best things about being you?

2. What are your dreams for the future? What kind of life do you want to live when you’re an adult? What inventions do you hope to see?

3. What do you think grown-ups may not realize about being a kid today? What would you like them to know?

4. What are some of your favorites right now? Think: movies, books, video games, friends, foods, classes.

5. What do you like most about the adults in your life? What makes them special to you?

Questions for Adults … to Share With Kids

We know you have a lot of stories that the child in your life would want to hear! Use these questions to shape a response. Consider creating a “memory box” with items from your own childhood to accompany your written words, video or drawings.

1. What were you like when you were the age of the child in your life? What did your parents and teachers say about you?

2. What did you like to do when you were a kid? Where did you go after school? What kinds of games did you play?

3. What did you think you would be when you grew up? How is that different (or the same) from what you actually did?

4. What are some things every child should learn in order to be a happy and successful adult?

5. What is your favorite memory about the child in your life?
